Are you going to realise your dream during this lifetime ?

by Sue Newell

This article by Mark Baker came from a friend and gave me a kick in the seat of the pants when I needed it. The story may hit a chord for you, if you are still delaying your dream.

A man lay on his bed at the end of his life,
His dream came to pay his last respects and bid him farewell,
And as it entered the room the man looked down in shame.
"Why didn't you realise me?" asked the dream.
"Because I was afraid," the man said.
"Afraid of what?" asked the dream.
"Afraid I would fail."
"But haven't you failed by not attempting to realise me?"
"Yes I have." said the man. But I always thought there was tomorrow."
"You Fool!" said the dream, "Didn't it ever occur to you that there's only ever today?"
"And now that death's here, can you put it off until tomorrow?"
"No." said the man, a tear gently rolling down his cheek.

The dream was softer now. Because it knew that there were two types of pain. The pain of discipline and the pain of regret. And while discipline weighs ounces, the weight of regret is unbearable.

Then the dream leant forward to gently wipe away the tear and said: "You only had to take the first step. And I would have taken one to meet you. For the only thing that separated us was your belief that you couldn't have me. I yearned and longed for you to realise me during our short existence together!"

And with that, they said goodbye and they both died...
